The birds fed cought their downy nests Among the boughs and rank to rest, Bare that sweet warbler of the vale, Lone plaindre one, the nightlegale.

'Twes such an hour, and such an ore, When fairy bands delight to weare Their garlands, from the olfin flowers, Then his them to their sylvan bowers, No voice, no living thing was heard, No mortal foot the grand-blades strode, But list I that voiceless spott is broke, As the' some Malad from slumber woke. A voice is heard, -an carnest prayer Comes wafted on the wiogs of nir.-Whence come those sounds I so soft-20 swee One's very soul would bond to meet Their lowest cadence ! zow more clear, They burst upon the listening ear. But look I on yonder green bank's side, Close by the streamlet's ripling tide, A youth reclines with auburn heir, Rich, clustering round his forehead fair : His hand is to his temple press'd; As if come thought his coul distressed; His dark blue eyes are mildly raised, And on the sky's broad face he gazed; And from their azure depths, is beaming A soul with noblest impulso teeming, Whilst from his lips burst forth this prayer, That rices on the wings of oir.

INVOCATION. "Ye muses, at your feet I bend ! O, kindly delga to be my friend ! Bid eny weak fancy soar from earth, And range 'mid scenes of spirit birth; Enkladle on my bosom's pyre, A flame of high impassioned fire; Aid me to pluck the fairest flowers, That blassom in Pernorsua's bowers; Teach me to climb the steps of fame, And gela a Pott's glorious name."

It ceated -that sweet-that plaintive lay, But o're its echosdied away Into the boundless depths of heaven, There came a voice in answer given.

ME HI SPONSE. "Oh, child of earth, we've heard thy cry, And from our siry scats on high, ... We've mark'd thee for our favored child : On thee our feirest muse has smiled. We've watch'd the fire that lights thy soul, The thoughts that o'er thy spirit roll; Thy ardent aspirations rice, In lowering grandeur to the skies: Not ours to turn from thee away, While we possess the power to sway; Many have throve and not in valo, Peruessus's flowery beights to gain; How many names now shine as bright As stare upon the brow of night !-Thro' us they're gained undying name, And swell'd the glorious ranks of fame. Hear us fond youth I thine is the power Upon its summit high to soar And pluck the gayest blessoms there, To seatter o'er this world of care; With brightest gems to deck thy name, And stud a golden crown of fame, Onward! even now thy spirits lyre Is quickening with poetic fire,-Onward 71 pour fourth thy rapturous lay-It bath a charm the world to sway !!!"

The muses ceased,-the youth arose,-Upon his cheek the warm blood glows, And one would know by his boso:n's swell, His spirit was 'rapt in a holy spell. Newmarket, July 30th, 1860.

The second exercise, selected from the Fifth Book, was one very difficult to read; and but a ver proficient and apt reader could get through with it correctly. The exercises in orthography ed. were commendable, as also were the mental exercises. The room was neat and tidy, and bespoke order and discipline throughout,

A fault, however, that is common to all schools white 150 villages live been destroyed. also exists in this, viz. : incorrect pronunciation of certain words, and want of attention to punctuation. To illustrate, - the word !moun. tain' was pronounced mountin, and the word 'governor' was pronounced gup'ner, and 'England' was pronounced Inglun. I do not speak of this as an exceptional case, for it is found in every school. Neither does the error exist with the teacher altogether, for scholars form these habits when conversing with one another. It is geeless for a teacher to labor to inculcate correct habits of pronunciation, if it is to be abandoned the moment the popil is out of his sight. If the scholar would attain a degree of let correctness be practised out of the school room, in conversation with one another, and in the family circle, and much better progress will be made in the rehoof-room, for a child will learn more in one day from home example,

Butter Inspection.

(From the Montreal Witness,)

No kind of produce occasions more disappointment than butter. It is no uncommon thing for lots that are described by the senders in the most glowing terms to turn out. very ordinary quality. That the conders are quite sincero in their statements is obvious Your the fact that they fay high prices for it, and sometimes give direction to have it in- IMPORTANT TO SHOE MAKERS spected, that they may ditain the advantage of its excellent quality; and we know of no way of reconciling the ligh character given dinary or rather poor quality it turns out here, without allowing considerable deterioration by the way. Nor is this unlikely to be the case. The weather is warm, the cars or steamboats are close, the butter becomes toft and loses its originally fine, fresh flavour, which no subsequent cooling or hardening well worthy the attention of those who belong to the Trade. Our experiences in the twices and will restore; may, it is well if it has not acquired more or less rancidity. It is, there have been brucht to the Trade than improved method is of a greater brucht to the Trade than onything yet introduced. The above l'atent Right was granted thin deterioration should be taken into ac- April 5th, 1859. Parties in the Trade wishing t count by purchasers of butter in the interior, purchase Shop Rights, will please address to the in the price they pay. To illustrate what we have stated above, we will give some netual instances. A country accepant who has handled a great deal of butter, and who is a reliable man, writes :--"I have shipped 12 ke)s butter of the 1st quality. I have no doubt it will bear inspection." From this high character of the butter by the sender, it was judged, for his interest, to have the parcel inspected, in the expectation that it would brand at least 2nds and Erds. but it turned out 2 kegs thirds and 10 fourths, which is just about the average of fair storepucked lots. Ordinary poor store-packed lots are not over an average of fourths, and some less, and bring with difficulty 12 to 121 ofs. Another country merchant, whose judgement and word are both to be depended upon, have taken great care in the selection of the whole of this butter.' This lot had a quick prossage, was got in from the boat in the morning, and, upon inspection, turned out as follows :- 5 seconds.

"This is one of the best lots I have ever handled, being nearly all put up carefully at the different farms in this neighborhood.]

6 extra thirds, 29 thirds, 10 fourths. This being fully thirds, and, consequently, a very superior average, and the packages being in good order, brought 137 cents on the 18th, which, however, was an advance on any prevegy sales, as before that it would not probably have brought over 131 to 1 cents. On the same day a lot, a little inferior, was sold without inspection at 13ke; and an ordinary lot at 13e. . It may be said, if butter deteriorates so much by sending to market in cummer, it should be kept at home till fall, but perhaps this alternative presents still greater disadvantages. In the first place, butter kept for two or three months in any ordinary store or cellar will deteriorate in quality as much as by a journey of a few days, even in summer. Secondly, it will lose more in weight; and in the third place, the money is locked up for all the time it lies. It is true, the price may be higher in fall than in summer, but that is a contingency that may turn out the other

The conclusion we draw from our experiened in the butter trade is that only the choicost dury butter, and that fresh and in good order every way, will pass No. 1. Such bu!ter as this seldous cours, we think from merchants. It requires very good dairy butter to pass No. 2, and this trade might, we think, be obtained more extensively by merchants giving firkins to such farmers' wives as really know how to make and prok butter. No store-packed butter, however good, need he calculated to page over thirds, and it will be well if ordinar lots do not run below fourths. Now, when it is remembered that the Consdian standard of inspection is considerably below the Irish, it will be seen what an improvement lies yet before Canada in the butter trade. It may be suspected by some that the Inspectorie too severe, but this, we think, can hardly be the case. It is altogether against his own interest to be so, for were butter to pass well, inspection would become popular, and he would have abundance of business, instead of having little to inspect. If he has any leaning at all, therefore, which we think, he has not, it would be towards leniency in inspection. Hop, Mr. H. Merritt, M. P. P., bar besh vincen a candidate for the Legislative
